To study the effect of heparin on the coagulability of cattle blood with subsequent development of thrombotic occlusion of vessel wall as a model of vascular occlusion in man and other animals. To examine and quantitate the effect of heparin on the binding of fibrinogen to glass fibers and fibrin deposited thereupon. To develop a model of thrombosis which will take advantage of the greater susceptibility of parenchymal cells to thrombosis which occurs in different vascular beds. To use cryofibrinogen deposition during cryosurgery to inhibit coagulation and to inhibit subsequent thrombosis.

Q: Double Type Casting I'm having a double-type casting issue here. The point is that I'm sending some data back from a service, but the data doesn't correspond to the data sent to that service. It has to be double, but on my side it needs to be a string. So I have to turn the double into a string. I've tried this: `string Value = ((string)DoubleValue).ToString();` But it doesn't work. Casting the string for return, casting it for castin, casting it for casting it for the cast, you get the point. Any ideas? Thanks.

A: One way to do it is to cast to decimal, so it first converts the double to a decimal: `string Value = ((decimal)DoubleValue).ToString();`

A: It is a pity that string is the least appropriate, most stupid of all the primitive types for the type conversion. You can cast to Decimal and then you have the decimal type. Then cast it to String: `string stringValue = ((Decimal)DoubleValue).ToString();` Or even to double: `double doubleValue = ((Decimal)DoubleValue).ToDouble();`
